

0	A train is coasting around a large circular track. It is then switched to a smaller circular track. How does its speed change? Assume no friction, and assume the train is a point mass
Speed does not change (by any noticeable amount, say $>1/1000$ of train's speed)	It's unclear, it could slightly decrease or it could stay the same